season, the charmed life everyone yearns for. Not only were they undefeated as they suited up against Northwest-Shoals but they had climbed to number three in the nation.

They enjoyed success against NWS, winning the game handily, but the victory came at a heavy cost.

Sometimes before you build up, you have to tear down; that's how Dr. Cordell Wynn explained the presence of a bulldozer on Shelton State's construction site at its Fredd campus recently.

As part of its $2.2 million renovation, Fredd's "brown box" building had to be removed. It had served a noble purpose, but it was time to go, said the special assistant to the college president. "It served as the first headquarters of the

The third part in an ongoing series about the various college offices that affect Shelton State students.

Shelton State Community College is one of the most affordable public colleges in the nation, but many students still need assistance when it comes to financing their education.

The primary function of the Financial Aid (FA) department is to assist students in funding their education. The FA department at Shelton State offers a wide variety of programs that can help students gain an education. The FA department handles paperwork involving grants, scholarships, loans, and federal work studies.

Pell grants are available for students who are eligible. Pell grants will only cover classes that are necessary for a degree or certificate program. Eligibility is determined by the federal processor. Students must fill out the Free Application for Federal Student Aid (FAFSA) prior to July of the year for which they will first attend college and must renew their FAFSA each additional year by Feb. 1.

Shelton State also offers a variety of scholarships which include a wide variety of types: academic,

State Foundation scholarships. These scholarships are competitive and applying for them should be done as soon as possible.

In a recent interview, Jo Ann Cousette of the FA department said, "Most students believe that they only need to maintain the minimum GPA to keep their scholarships but they must also complete a certain percentage of hours that they attempt."

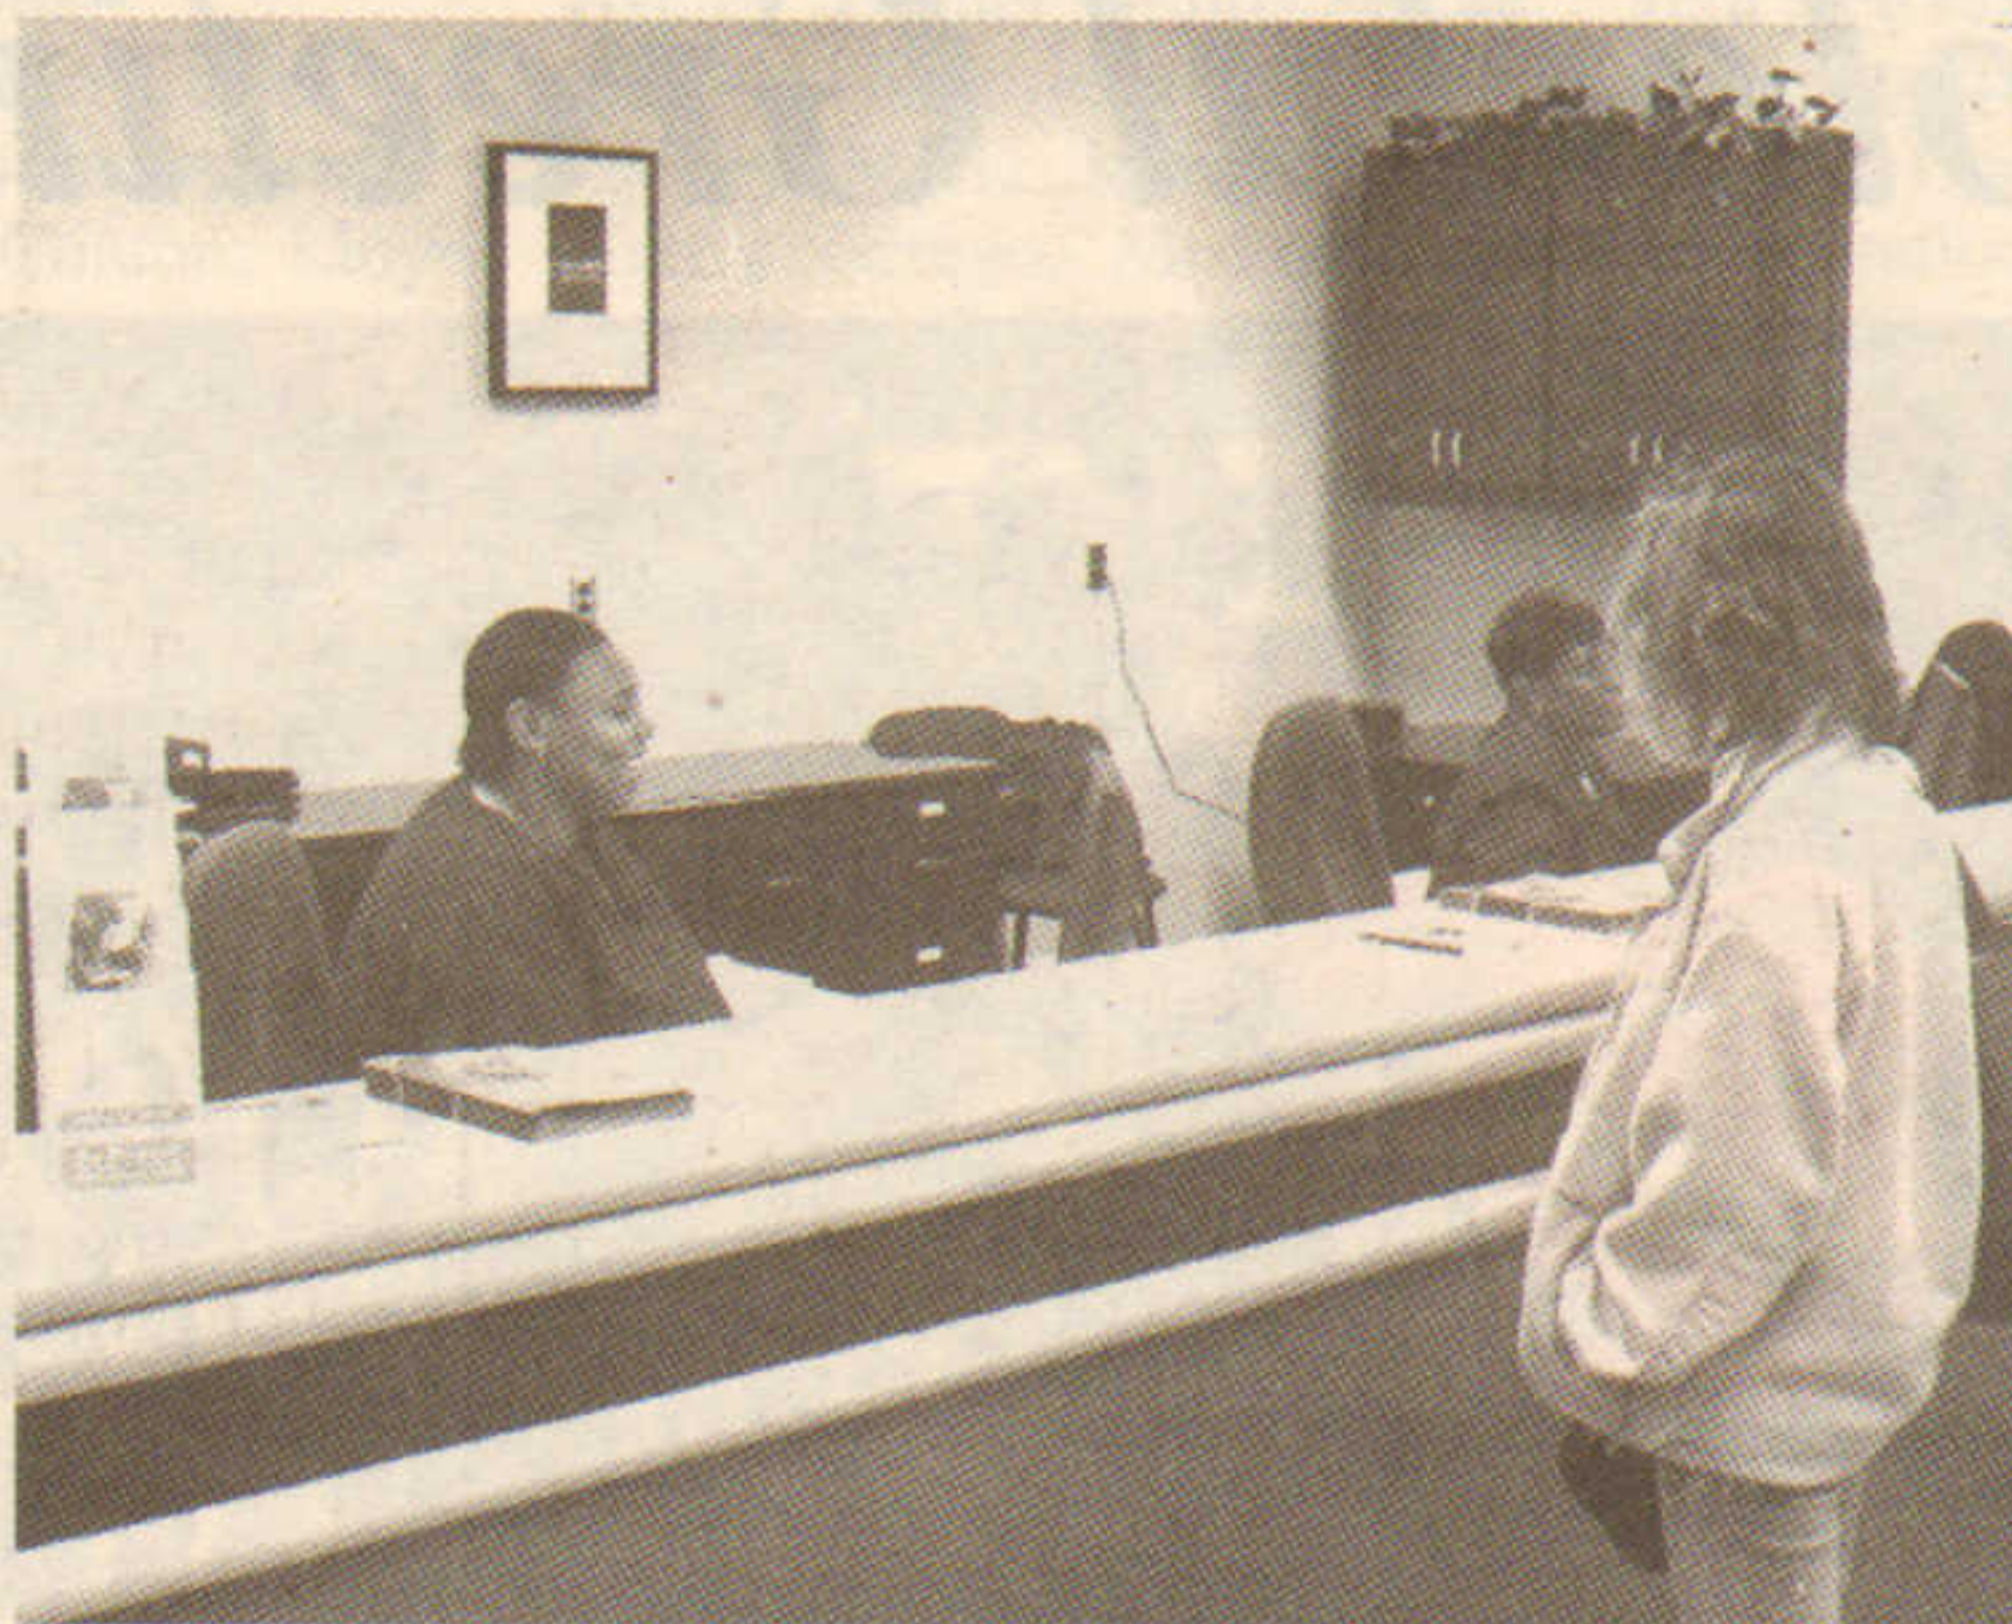

Cousette said that the minimum completion rate of attempted hours is 67 percent while keeping a 2.0

GPA.

"Most students think they are saving their GPA by withdrawing completely, but they are actually hurting themselves," Cousette said.

Cousette also said that many students do not know the difference between official withdrawals and unofficial withdrawals. Withdrawing unofficially can also keep a student from receiving financial aid in upcoming semesters. If a student must withdraw from a class then he or she must go to the Admissions Office and fill out a form. When a student stops coming to a class completely that is considered an unofficial withdrawal.

Cousette encourages all students to read the course catalog, especially the section about financial aid. Any more information about programs can be obtained in the Financial Aid office on the first floor.

The Bucs lost, probably, their best three-point threat in guard Quinn Beckwith. The left-hander was just finding his stroke from long range when he was lost for the season with a torn anterior cruciate ligament.

Beckwith's threes might have made a difference in the first loss of the season, against the Bucs' perennial nemesis, the Cardinals of Gadsden State.

Head Coach Barry Mohun threw wave after wave of athletic players at Gadsden on Jan. 23. Mohun's specialty always seems to be to wear down the opponent with Shelton's consistently great depth of talent. Playing many players must also help in recruiting and it stood to reason it would be the deciding factor against a team like Gadsden which was only dressing eight players.

The Bucs were only 5-25 from 3-point range and seemed to miss Beckwith. Mohun told the media, "We have to learn to adapt. We are going to have to do a little better against the zone. I expect to see a lot of it in the high as we can there," women's head coach Madonna Thompson said. "I really believe at the end of the season this team can be a champion. We have so many good players and a great bench. We've been playing teams with 5 or 6 great players and we're putting in about 14 great players every game."

The team's streak came to an end, unfortunately, against their great rival, Gadsden State, 73-61, on Jan. 23. The Lady Cardinals uncharacteristically chose to press the Bucs and were able to force 10 turnovers in the second half. In the first stanza, the Bucs were successful with the play, getting Gadsden to give the ball back to the home team 12 times.

Before this game, the Lady Bucs' sole loss was to Tallahassee Community College by only 5 points. Going into the Gadsden game, Shelton had scored a total of 1,383 points with an average score of 81.35 per game. The Bucs attribute their success to not dropping off in intensity throughout the entire game.

Going into the Gadsden game, the Lady Bucs were ranked #18 in the nation and

Ex-soldier tackles Shelton after stint in Middle East

By Clark Vandagriff

For many students, coming back to school is something they dread. For Natasha Rutledge, it is a relief.

Rutledge is in the Army Reserve, and returned from overseas in July of 2003. She spent three months in Kuwait and one month in Iraq. There, she assigned incoming soldiers to their location in either Iraq or Kuwait.

"It wasn't that hard to adjust to the Army lifestyle. I was brought up in a fairly strict household," Rutledge said.

"At first I felt scared and angry that she had to go. Then I guess I just accepted the fact that she had to go," Rutledge's mother, Mattie Neal, said.

Before she was sent overseas, Rutledge was trained for a month on land navigation, weapons training, physical fitness and first aid.

"We're privileged in America. Those people had it bad. Being in the Army really made me appreciate all that I have," Rutledge said.

Rutledge spent much of her time overseas sleeping and writing letters.

"We didn't have very much time to spare," Rutledge said. "Prayer, letters from family, and our unit supporting each other helped me out a lot over there."

According to on-line sources, The Army Reserve recruited 23,859 in fiscal year 2005, which was 84 percent of its original goal.

Despite the beliefs of many, Rutledge says there is really not much difference in the treatment of men and women in the Army.

"They treat men and women equal. The physical fitness standards are different, but that's about all," she said.

Rutledge was born in Chicago, but in 1993, moved to Carrollton, Ala., in Natasha Rutledge served in Kuwait and Iraq in 2003.

Pickens County, where she graduated Carrollton High School in 2000. According to recent figures, exactly 77.4 percent of citizens enlisted in the Army Reserve were high school graduates.

"After I came home, I was spending time working, saving money, and getting things in line financially before coming back to school," Rutledge said.

She enrolled in the Army for the education benefits. She attended Mississippi University for Women in Columbus for three semesters until January of 2001. She decided to move back to Alabama and attend the much smaller Shelton State Community College. 3.7 percent of the Army Reserve has had a year's experience in college.

"I'm glad she finally gets to complete it this time. Every time she starts school, she gets sent away. It's something she's really wanted," Neal said.

"My plans were to go to college, but I decided to let them pay for it," Rutledge said.

Rutledge was sent home after her time overseas because her father passed away. After a little mourning time, she became sick. She was not able to return overseas.

"I kissed the ground at the Birmingham Airport. Needless to say I was excited to return home," Rutledge said.

When her father died, both she and her brother were overseas. It took longer to find her than her brother because she was in a blackout zone, so it really started to scare me. I was happy that they got to come home though," Neal said.

Her unit is in Gordo, with the 813th Replacement Company. She has two years left in the Reserves.

"I may reenlist after the two years are up," Rutledge said.

Rutledge plans to transfer to the University of Alabama to pursue a degree in advertising. This is her first semester at Shelton.

"The Army helped me have discipline, leadership skills, and a lot of appreciation. That will help me out a lot in the future."

Title III program. Back in 1987, we administered $350,000 out of that office. Now the program has grown to over a million dollars a year. We have served a lot of students in this way and the new facilities will help us serve even more," Wynn said.

President Rick Rogers came by the Fredd campus to check on progress just when the old was being removed to make room for the new. He said he was very excited about the changes taken place. "We see this campus as our biggest area for future growth," he commented.

Rogers said it was a bit sad to see a building that was a part of history. "But this does not dampen our enthusiasm for the many positive attributes of the new facility."

Wynn, who was the long-term president of Stillman college in Tuscaloosa, said he has enjoyed the overseeing of the Fredd campus renovation more than anything he has ever done. "I have been thrilled and excited—mentally and physically—to see this campus renewed and renovated, to become even more functional for our students, faculty and staff. This gives me great satisfaction."

Wynn is well aware of the challenges in place to achieve any major project in higher education, and he gives credit to his boss for overcoming these obstacles.

"Really, Dr. Rogers is to be commended for all the hard work he does, and especially for his efforts on behalf of the Fredd campus."

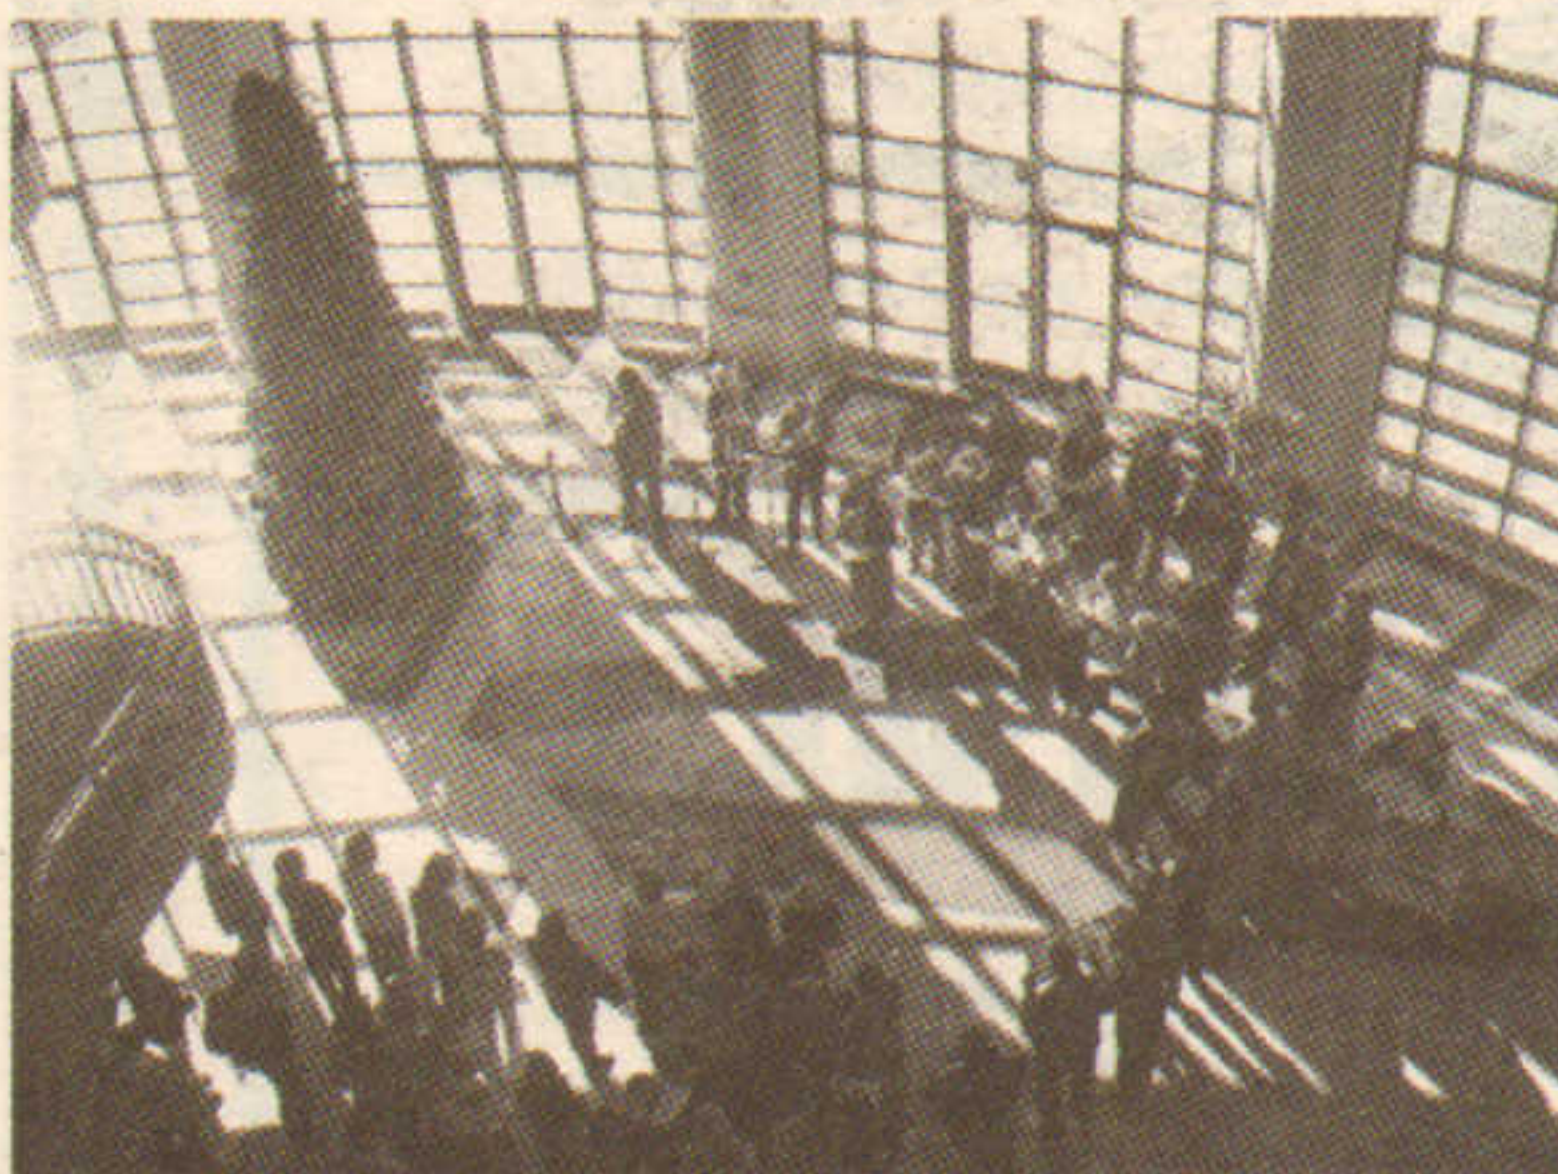

Wynn has a message for everyone in the Shelton community having to do with the Fredd campus. "The date I want everyone to keep in mind is May 4! We're still on schedule and that's the date we project to show off what we have done here. May 4, I want to see everybody here!"

Recently President Rick Rogers (L) of Shelton State stopped by the Fredd campus on MLK Drive to check on the progress of the $2.2 million renovation taking place. Dr. Cordell Wynn, Rogers's special assistant, looked over the construction, also. Wynn urges everyone to mark May 4 on their calendars as the day to visit the campus and see the results for themselves.

Shel-Home for the holidays

Over the holidays, many Tuscaloosans visited the Martin campus and made themselves at home. The faculty and staff also took time to enjoy each other's company and their campus abode. Among those enjoying the season were Student Dean Tommy Taylor at the PTK Breakfast, Dr. Milady Murphy of the Wellness Center, Fran Viselli as Father Christmas, former Mayor Al DuPont and School Board Chair Sandra Hall Ray.

Bucs are out for revenge.

The top three scorers for the Lady Bucs are Kristi Martin with 14.5 points per game, Shaquita Bell with 13.6 points per game, and Melody Hudson with 10.8 points per game. Hudson also leads the conference in steals per game. The most improved players this season are Tia Jackson, who had to overcome an ACL tear, Gabrielle Essex, and Flesia Sanders. Assistant coach Chris Sanford says that everyone on the team has improved greatly.

Coach Thompson said, "We've maintained intense pressure on defense and we run the floor really well on offense."

She plans to work harder at defensive discipline and "doing the little things right."

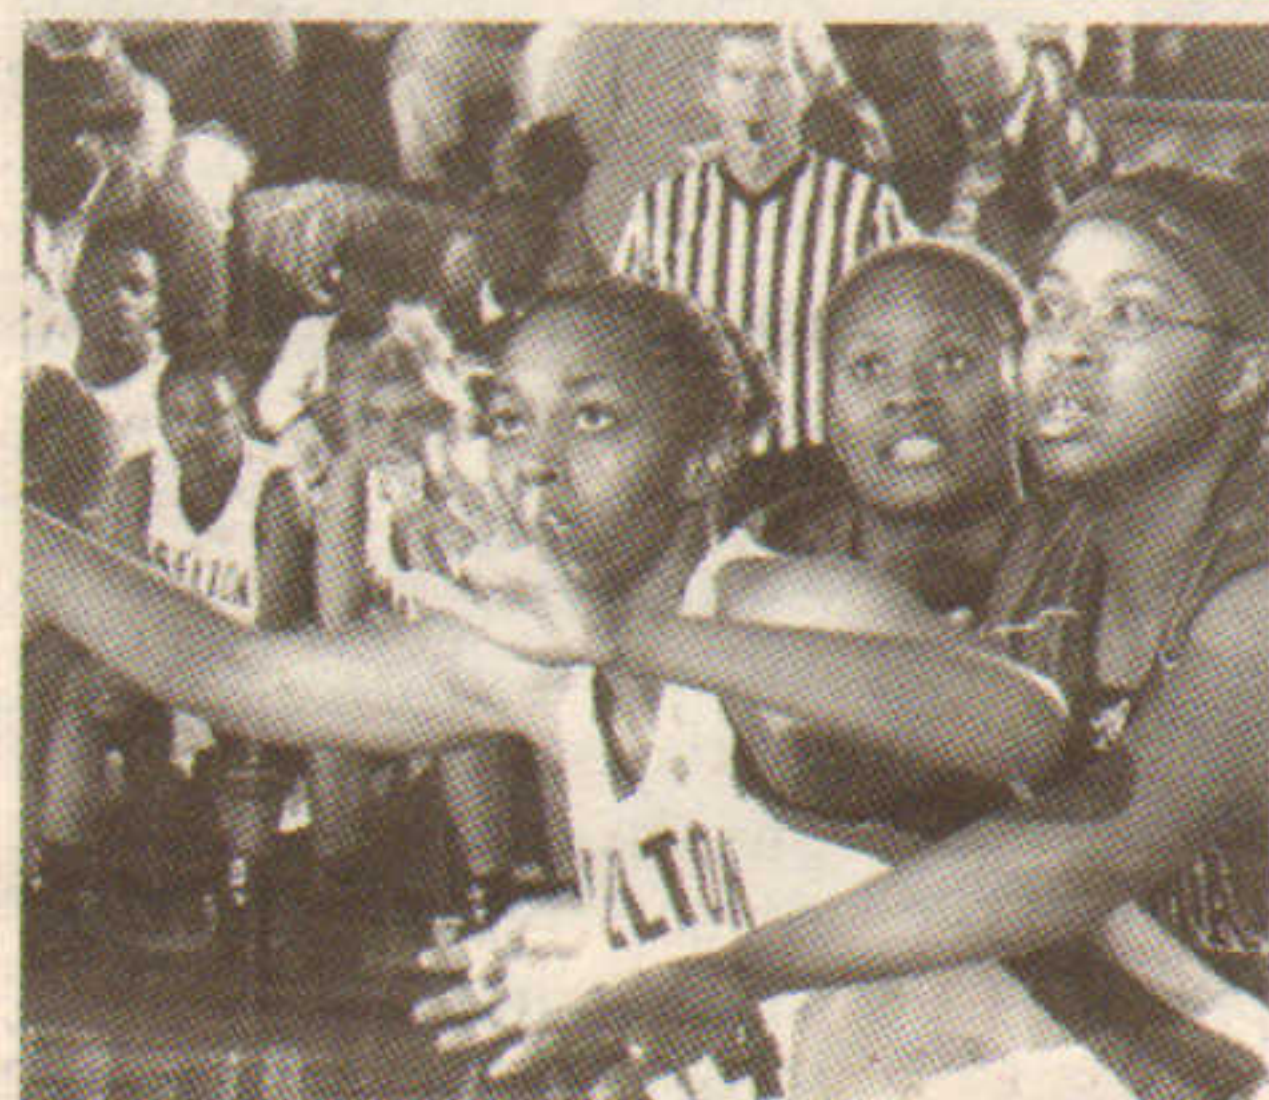

All who've seen them say the Buccaneers have played incredibly well this season; now all they have to do is get beyond those pesky red birds when tournament time comes around.

Woman in Black serves as theatre appreciation class for audience

The Woman in Black shows once again what professional-quality theatre can do

Although it was billed as a "spine chiller," the recent production of The Woman in Black didn't seem to excessively scare much of anyone in the crowds it gathered from Jan. 13-22 at the college's Bean-Brown Theatre.

As a matter of fact, the spooky effects, the background story and the acting were all what one might expect from a sure-enough, truth-in-advertising ghost story.

But the good news is that this was of the caliber one might expect of, say, Broadway—not "mere" community theatre. As is usually the case with Theatre Tuscaloosa, sitting through this production was an exercise in theatre appreciation, a virtual classroom experience.

The tour-de-force of drama, in this case, must begin and finally end with the acting. Jeff Wilson and Gary Wise displayed their acting chops in a unique way—with one acting the role of the other and the first adopting a series of characters, including a variety of British accents. The joy was in seeing them pull it off.

The set-up was definitely post-modern. It was all very much a play-within-a-play scenario. The audience was, in effect, invited to forget who was whom and where was where. Wilson's character (lawyer Arthur Kipps) tells Wise's character (a professional actor) that he needs his help to make sense of a terrible event that has affected his life. He wants to be able to demonstrate to his family and friends the trauma he has endured. So the professional actor agrees to adopt the role of Kipps and Kipps, over a course of time, more and more skillfully acts out the actions and words of the people he had encountered.

The chief pleasure for the audience, then, becomes mentally keeping straight who Kipps is now and just how much the actor is acting or how much he is actually sharing in the fear Kipps felt.

The audience is helped along the the expert use of the lighting and sound systems, black, gauzy curtains and a misting machine.

Shelton student Bryan Wynn said this was about the third play he had ever seen and it fascinated him. "It has renewed my interest in seeing live shows again. The fact that you are almost made a part of the play excites me. You cannot get that by watching a movie on screen."
